

The Expanding boundaries of legal geography

Australia enjoys benefits of an extraordinarily broad, robust, and rigorous community of legal geography scholars. Regularly leading, and contributing to national and international discussions of the inherently intertwined nature of law, society, and our shared human and more-than-human systems, legal geography scholars are consistently pushing the boundaries, and refining the nature of scholarship in this sub-field.

This panel presents works that address these sub-disciplinary “expanding boundaries,” creating space for an exploration of work that add to our understanding of the topics, methodologies, theories, and epistemologies that underlie cutting edge legal geographic work.
